CHINESE CUISINE TODAY

Chinese cuisines has several features that unify it traditionally. These are steaming, boiling and stir flying, and use of chopsticks. These separate Chinese food from all but Japanese and Korean (which are heavily Chinese influenced). Chinese cuisine is noted for bringing out the flavours of fine ingredients by quick economical cooking the use of best, freshest and well kept ingredients and the minimum of heavy sauces or flavourings. Methods of cooking are appropriate to specific combinations. These involve much marinating of meats with wines, soy sauce, sesame oil, ginger and garlic. There is much stress on the variety and quality of vegetables, a preference of pork, beef thicken meat, fish and shellfish. This stems from the concern of Chinese culture of the effects of food on the body Out food lastly is less concerned with food as a visual art (not always) than sacrificing the flavour or texture, it should always be good for you! (Some dishes depend on the availability of seasonal vegetables.)
